

SMOKED AND DRANK AT ROYAL FUNERAL

Guards Charged With Undignified Action at Pochelnarn.

BODIES IN FREIGHT CARS

Slurs on Duchess of Hohenberg Because of Her Non-royal Birth.

Special Cable Despatch to The Sun.

VENNA, July 5.—Gossip and scandal are cropping up in the columns of the newspapers in regard to the funeral of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand and the princess of Hohenberg, which is said to have been turned into a sort of excursion by the guards and others who drank and smoked during the trip across the Danube. There was no dignity whatever about the affair and the bodies were carried to Pochelnarn in ordinary freight cars.

There is much criticism also in regard to the alleged discrimination against the Duchess of Hohenberg in the court ceremonials. The court officials attempted to make the ceremonial too painfully correct and it is reported that but for the intervention of Emperor Francis Joseph the body of the Duchess would not have been brought to the Hofburg chapel but would have been conveyed alone direct from the Vienna station to Aristetien.

When the bodies of the Archduke and Duchess arrived at Pochelnarn a violent thunderstorm was prevailing and this upset all the arrangements. The bodies were placed on the stone floor of the waiting room where they remained for two hours and the guards and others seemed to forget all the rules of good behavior, strolling around, drinking beer and eating sausage. Some of the important personages smoked cigars beside the coffin of the Archduke. Finally the bodies were placed in freight cars and in this way reached their destination.

Special Cable Despatch to The Sun.

PARIS, July 5.—The suffragettes held their first open air demonstration on the Champs Elysees, where the statues of Condorcet and Voltaire were the scene of the Women's League presented fans, flowers and laurels to passersby.

Mrs. Rebour, who was the chief speaker at the meeting, said the league disclaimed the use of violence, which was repugnant to their ideas. She said they believed in gentleness combined with firmness, two qualities befitting women.

There were about 2,000 women in the procession, but many of them went to the meeting out of curiosity. The parade halted at the statue of the Marquis de Condorcet, the French philosopher and revolutionist, where they placed flowers and laurels.

The leaders of the demonstration were Mrs. Verone, Marguerite Durand, Mme. Severine, the woman writer, and M. Sembat, a Socialist Deputy.

Mother of Dobbs Boy Helps in All Night Search.

MATR LANSING, N. J., July 5.—After an all night search, Valentine Dobbs, a three-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. V. Dobbs, was found this morning. He was found under a pine tree in the woods near the house of the family, from which he had wandered yesterday afternoon. He was wet to the skin and was suffering from many mosquito bites.

The boy disappeared from the family group at dusk as the Dobbses were seated in the park at an ice cream table. It was believed he ran in the direction taken by a balloon that had been sent up by the park management and got lost. Some thought he had been kidnapped, while others feared he had fallen into a lake.

At 8 o'clock this morning the frantic father called his son's name and the boy finally replied. Mrs. Dobbs, who was in an all night searching party, found him in the boy in her arms. The child was almost exhausted, but Dr. M. C. James soon revived him.

HUERTA WINS EASILY IN HIS OWN ELECTION

ton "court-martial" that first got Villa in bad odor with the United States and Great Britain. Garza has acted as Villa's legal adviser. He was a very close friend of the late President Francisco I. Madero, and is said to have represented the Madero interests in all things connected with the revolution. Concessions to the Madero family were granted by Villa on the suggestion of Garza, it is alleged by Carranza's followers, and when Carranza attempted to annul or stop those, the Madero influence on Villa was so strong that Villa finally split openly with his chief.

That he had asserted his independence even before the open break is charged by the Carranza supporters as due to Garza and the Maderos. The open break was brought about by Madero influence; but even then Villa acted with reluctance, they say, after the Maderos had seen that it was the only way to put through their own plans. They had been able to handle Villa, but with Carranza in full control they would have to meet a man as astute as himself. For this reason they are said to have feared Carranza's control of Villa.

Villa, it is said, has now been persuaded that it is necessary for the success of the revolt for him to affiliate with Carranza. He has been shown that since he is a warrior and not a diplomat, and since Carranza is the opposite, there is a work for both that could not be accomplished by either alone. This is said to have appealed strongly to Villa and to have induced him to drop Garza.

This is the first time Villa has been argued with on the matter. None of his own Generals has ever dared oppose his plans. They could see that he was being duped by the politicians in his camp, but feared to tell him of it. For Villa is a man of quick temper. The men in the peace conference came to him from other camps. They are not under his orders and they talked to him as friends arguing a common cause and are said to have made him see a number of things that had not been clear to him before.

Among the arguments used to Villa one is said to have been that the Maderos are not representing the interests for which Villa is fighting, but rather the principles of the old Diaz regime under a new guise. It was pointed out to Villa that while Francisco Madero was an idealist who was fighting for the common people he was from a rich family that at first called him crazy, yet when he was in power it was his family who exploited the country the most; that their interest in the present revolution is the interest of rich men who would identify themselves with the winning side in an attempt to handle the concessions.

As a result, Villa's ardor for the Maderos is said to have cooled and their influence in the new revolution will be charged to worst control. The Maderos own immense tracts of land, great factories and other enterprises in Mexico. Villa proposes to be fighting for an equal distribution of the lands. Villa has been asked in the conference if he can really believe the Maderos are supporting him because of the love they have for his principles. The question is reported to have had much effect.

"While the spirit of Francisco Madero will be as prominent as ever in the rebel army," remarked a Carranza man to-day, "the rule of the Madero family will be very largely eliminated."

Carranza is to make a concession to Villa, also, in the matter of money. Rafael Zubizarain, chief of the Washington Junta, is to be dropped from the Carranza cabinet, it is stated. Villa charges that Capmany is responsible for the most of the mischief against him in the Carranza cabinet. Capmany is the man who drafted the letter from Carranza to Bryan in which it was declared that the United States must withdraw its troops from Vera Cruz.

This was done after Villa had said he glad the United States had landed troops. Villa and his adherents insisted that warlike action on the part of Carranza against the United States would have under Mexico under the banner of Huerta and Villa. The questioner asserted that "treachery in the camp" of Carranza had caused the default note to the United States.

For this reason, Capmany, the author of the note, is alleged to have intrigued against Villa. Capmany is also said to have had another object. This was, it is charged, to wrest the control of the Mexican Central Railroad from the hands of Villa and put it under the control of Carranza men whose appointment Capmany believed he could dictate. These would have been favorable to the American stockholders. Villa held on to the road, however, and will continue to hold it. For these and other reasons Villa is said to believe that the removal of Capmany from the Carranza official family is necessary if peace is to reign in the rebel ranks, and Carranza agents in the meeting are understood to be agreeable to forcing Capmany to "walk the plank."

If there is to be a stumbling block to the peace plans it will be over Gen.

Felipe Angeles. It is said that his status has been settled, but certain of Carranza's friends here assert that the Chief is determined to drive Angeles from Mexico on the ostensible ground that he is a traitor, but really because Angeles has Presidential aspirations of which Villa appears to approve. Villa insists that Angeles have a title of chief of artillery of the entire rebel army, although remaining on active duty in the army. The mediators have agreed to this, it is said, but there is belief that Carranza may balk at it.

Within less than a week Gen. Villa will be back in the field at the head of his army advancing toward Mexico city if nothing goes awry with plans now being worked out at Torreon.

The conference has had the effect of bringing Villa closer to the Carranza Generals, Obregon and Gonzalez, and this is expected to bring better results in the field. Hitherto, they and Villa have been unknown to each other. Obregon rose to prominence on the west coast and in the north, while Gonzalez was in the east, by his victories over the Federalists in Tamaulipas, Coahuila and Nuevo Leon. Meanwhile, Villa was making him self monarch of the strip of territory running south from Juarez.

The conference has brought all the leaders of their personal representatives together, and Villa promised to cooperate with these commanders. They promised to cooperate with him.

The dignity of the First Chief will be maintained. Villa in return will not be interfered with. He is to have the central position in the march on Mexico City, and when he cannot get supplies from his own territory the Carranza element will supply it. It will really be as if he were giving them the right to get ammunition when he calls for it, but he will raise his own funds for this purpose. All he asks is permission to import it through Tampico.

Villa has always had his own purchasing agents. Carranza has never bought ammunition, guns or supplies for Villa, and is not going to begin under the new arrangement. It will really be as if two rebel governments were operating against Huerta.

PREDICT JUNTA CHANGES.

Rivalry Among Rebel Agents Has Been Noticeable.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—That the efforts of members of the Madero family to acquire a predominant influence in the prospective government in Mexico is a factor in the disturbed relations between Villa and Carranza was admitted to-night by Constitutional agents here. Despatches from the rebel headquarters in the Washington representation of the Constitutionalists here were declared to be truly prophetic.

Rafael Zubizarain, the chief Washington agent of Carranza, declined to comment on the reports. He declined also to make any statement regarding the relations of the Madero family to the Constitutional organization. He said that he was not advised of any tentative agreement having been reached by the Congress at Torreon on any of the subjects under discussion.

In other quarters, however, quite as well informed on the intricacies of revolutionist politics, it was stated that the Carranza influence has long been a bone of contention in the Constitutional camp. Rafael Zubizarain, uncle of the late President, who was admitted to the Constitutional organization, is credited with the efforts to secure for the family a substantial influence with the prospective government. The fact that the Carranza family have been making a revolution of the land the chief feature of their programme and the fact that the Carranza family rests chiefly upon their vast land holdings are sufficient explanation of the deep interest of the Maderos.

Col. Cabrera, another Carranza agent here, is also reported to be slated for dismissal. As a matter of fact it has for some time been noticeable in Washington that there exists among the revolutionist agents here a rivalry and a hostility of cooperation which boiled off for the unity of the rebel forces once they achieved a complete victory over Huerta. Speculation regarding possible changes in the personnel of the rebel Junta was increased by the arrival here to-day of Col. Aliso, who was Mexican Military Attaché in Berlin under the Madero regime. He is a close friend of Carranza and may replace one of the present members of the Junta.

Col. Aliso left Saltillo on June 25, but the rebel Junta was not informed of his trip. Members of the Junta expressed surprise that no word of the coming of Col. Aliso had preceded him from the headquarters of the Carranza forces. They disclaimed any knowledge of the purpose of his journey.

Col. Aliso said he came here for the purpose of making a study of the military of the Quartermaster's Department of the United States army with a view of improving the system in the Constitutional forces.

Constitutionalist agents said to-night that Col. Baucche Alcaide, who was reported to have left Saltillo for Washington with Col. Aliso, came only as far as El Paso, and will not come to Washington.

Senior Luis Cabrera, before leaving for New York to-night said:

"I know both of these gentlemen. Col. Aliso is a lawyer by profession and Col. Baucche Alcaide is an editor. Both, I understand, are friends of Senor Iglesias Calderon."

No member of the Mexican Constitutionalists would discuss the suggestion that Senor Calderon had had any part in the break in the relations of Villa and Carranza.

Senor Calderon is generally blamed by friends of Villa for the recent break.

ARMY OF 40,000 IS GATHERING TO ATTACK SAN LUIS POTOSI

From the Spectator's Correspondent of THE SUN.

ATHENS, July 5.—George Fred Williams, the United States Minister to Greece and Montenegro, said to-day that he knew nothing of the report that President Wilson had sent a demand for his resignation because of his recent criticism of the conduct of the Powers in reference to Albania.

Mr. Williams continued to-day his remarks in regard to conditions in Albania. He said the Congress of the adopted by the Powers gave the Epitrotes no effective guarantee because a majority of the signatories, including Great Britain, refused to send troops into the interior of Albania. Besides this, it rejected the demands of the Epitrotes that the gendarmerie should not be employed outside the borders of Epirus and that for a time the governors of the autonomous State should be foreigners from a neutral country.

Mr. Williams said that a member of the International Control Commission at Turazog informed him that the demands of the Epitrotes never would be accepted. Mr. Williams declared that without these guarantees the promises of the Powers were absolutely illusory.
